WHO ARE CATHOLIC SISTERS?

Western Pennsylvania is home to 17 congregations of women religious. Catholic sisters come in different “brands.” They belong to a variety of religious communities or orders that take on the characteristics of their founders and their founding traditions. All share similarities as Catholic sisters, yet have differences based on their origins and development.

Catholic sisters serve in many different ways. They are teachers in schools, universities and other settings. Some are engaged in health care ministries through direct patient care and in administrative roles. Other sisters work in social services or in parishes; some serve as campus ministers or counselors, while others work in foreign missions around the world. Many sisters reach out to persons who are poor or underserved, giving Christian witness through service, prayer, and presence. Cloistered sisters are called to prayer and contemplation. A large part of their day is spent praying for the needs of the world.

Catholic sisters are real people, too. They enjoy a good time, and they are generally characterized by happy spirits and peace of mind. They trust in the Lord and work wholeheartedly to serve God’s people, especially those in need.

WHAT IS THE GRVC?

The Greensburg Religious Vocation Council (GRVC) is a collaborative effort of various women’s and men’s religious communities in the Greensburg area.
